Besides the option for automatically signing in – someone you left with your preferred browser of use, might end up with your entire saved passwords list, and pry maybe?

You can prevent this by boarding an external password manager.

Browser password settings

Security:

- Password managers add a personal security layer to all your security needs.
- Everything can be saved in the managers instead of the browsers' for security measures.
- I personally like it when there are no saved passwords in my browser because I feel 'rest assured' ...

Productivity:

- Autofill forms management
- You can either choose to store such information on 'your browser' or your personal manager?
- Password managers (when logged on of course) are more reactive when you get to filling in your information online and offline. I am personally lazy to fill web forms so this increases my productivity as a user.
